The book begins by introducing members of the COE (Celebrants of Earth), a group that randomly blows up small oil refineries to disrupt oil shipments from the Middle East. While not benign, the COE had a conscience and avoided injuring anyone or taking lives. The genius of the group, Matthew Spenser, has a fanatical hatred towards terrorists because his parents were killed by a bomb in London. He is front and center throughout the book because he built a really serious, BIG PAYOFF, bomb that is the size of a fifty-cent piece. Imagine a bomb that can get lost in your pocket change or that could be dropped in any niche or corner and be completely overlooked, and the computerized trigger can be thousands of miles away from the bomb? The new bomb got the attention of the big honchos in the Middle East so the most dangerous assassin in the world is sent off with a few million dollars and a hidden agenda to recruit Matthew. The assassin, Zahir Damari, cozies up to Matthew with a false agenda of killing terrorists. And so the soup (er...plot) thickens. During an investigation of a tip, FBI Special Agents Michaela Caine and Nicholas Drummond were five minutes away from the explosion of an oil refinery in NJ. As early responders, they helped rescue people and became immediately entrenched in apprehending the COE. This bomb killed 15 people. You will not want to put this book down, everything moves fast, the dialogue is crazy good and the story is divided into mere days that are easy to follow notwithstanding that it covers moving events around the globe, from NY to the Middle East, London, D.C. and Virginia.

I have read the previous Coulter/Ellison "Brit in the FBI" books (The Final Cut and The Lost Key) which were excellent books. The End Game quite frankly make the prior books pale in comparison. The story takes place in less than a week. Nicholas Drummond and Michaela (Mike) Caine are partners in the NY city office of the FBI searching out information to apprehend the leaders of COE who have been blowing up refineries in an attempt to force US oil companies to stop buying from the middle east. A tip from an informant leads them to a nearby refinery which is literally blown up in front of them - with the loss of 15 refinery worker's lives. Nicholas had a hunch that the informant was in danger and had FBI agents guarding him - when they return not only is the informant dead, but all three guards have been killed. Up until this bombing, no lives have been lost - COE has changed their tactics. Vanessa Grace builds bombs for COE - but she is actually a CIA undercover agent. She is horrified that her boss, Matthew Spenser, has developed a super bomb and tested it at the refinery. Her job was to obtain the bomb and turn it over to the CIA. COE's computer wizard hacks into the computer systems of the major oil companies creating chaos. The story is fast moving, tense and illustrates the secrets kept between the highest law enforcement entities - and the potential cost of that secrecy. If you want to read in the current political climate, you may. I chose to read this as a potential scenario of what COULD happen if the various agencies fail to share information in a timely manner. Terrorism is alive and well, as this story illustrates.
